“The Ethics of Peace Journalism: Serving a Higher Calling”

By

Steve Youngblood

5:30– 6:45 pm, Tuesday, April 23, 2013

ACD102

Steven L. Youngblood directs the Center for Global Peace Journalism at Park University, where he is a tenured associate professor of communications. He serves as general manager of Park Cable TV and KGSP-FM, Pirate radio. Additionally, he is the chair of a University-wide Internationalization Task Force. He has taught Peace Journalism in the Republic of Georgia, Azerbaijan, Jordan, Turkey, The Bronx, NY, South Africa, Kenya, and Uganda. Youngblood directed and taught two Peace Journalism projects (with $420,000 in federal grants) in Uganda in 2010-11 and 2011-13. He is a two-time J. William Fulbright Scholar (Moldova 2001, Azerbaijan 2007). In 2012, Youngblood was recognized for service to global peace by the U.S. State Department (Alumni of the Month), Rotary International (Honorary Rotarian), and the UN Association of Greater Kansas City (Kansas City World Citizen of the Year). He is the author of “Professor Komagum: Teaching Peace Journalism and Battling Insanity in Uganda”. In 2001, Youngblood received a Fulbright Scholarship to teach at State University Chisinau, Moldova. Following his Fulbright year, in 2002 and 2003 he was named a State Department Speaker and Specialist Grantee. Youngblood's education began in journalism at the University of Kansas where he earned a bachelor's degree, which he then supplemented with a master's in education from Kansas State University. He considers his major accomplishments at Park to be putting the radio station on line, spearheading a capital improvement plan for broadcasting and working to expand and improve international education.

This Daniels Communication Lecture is part of Media and Communication Days: a four-day series of events sponsored by the North County Higher Education Alliance (NCHEA) that includes CSUSM, MiraCosta College, and Palomar College. MAC Days events aim to highlight the benefits of studying Communication, Journalism, and Media.
