

Okay, Cougars:

We need your help.

As the COVID-19 pandemic continues to pose challenges to even limited repopulation of our campus, we may elect to investigate off-campus behavior as it related to the risk reduction efforts to mitigate the risk of viral transmission.

So, what does this mean?

Students who choose to not comply with public health directives designed to reduce the risk of COVID-19 infection are subject to being held accountable through the student conduct process.

What type of behavior does this include?

- 01 Hosting and/or attending large events or gatherings at an off-campus residence
- 02 Failing to comply with the directions of a university official while conducting contact tracing or other mitigation measures
- 03 Providing false information to a university official

Students found in violation of the CSU Standards for Student Conduct may receive sanctions ranging from disciplinary probation to expulsion from the CSU.

Registered student organizations who violate health directives and regulations may also be warned and sanctioned in accordance with university procedures.
