THE WHOLEHEARTED ACTOR:

THE UNDERSTANDING AND COMMITMENT OF YOURSELF
TO THE CRAFT OF ACTING

ACTING IS AN EXACTING PROFESSION. It requires an artist to stand out by bringing their utmost truth to the surface in the present moment, and on demand. Theatre critic Helen Shaw describes the theatre making process as a wilderness, an ungoverned place where the rules constantly change, where danger is eminent, and where we need other humans to survive and thrive. This description resonates with me. To me, the practice of making theatre is a privilege: a practice of exploring my own wild human nature, of failing, telling the truth, and of becoming a wholehearted human being.

I look forward to sharing an excerpt of What Happens Next written by Naomi Iizuka and directed by Michael John Garces
